“ Jorge was actually the first boy born into a family with all girl cousins (San Diego Family) as they grew up together the arguments they all had from a toy being misplaced, broken toy, and of course the teasing of one another. He was a great kid, he enjoyed being outside and away from the girls, either riding a scooter, playing ball, driving his RC Car, or just being the silly one finding lizards to attach to his ear or tease the girls with it.

He had a great sense of humor and made sure your thinking cap was on from all the questions or scenarios he'd asked. He had a highly creative and curious mind, always making things out of stuff he'd find in the yard just to see how the overall project would turn out. I loved taking him with me when I could. The many trips to Sea World, Disneyland, Knott's Berry Farm, Magic Mountain, Miniature golf, Monster Trucks, the list goes on and on. He loved most of all going down to the beach, he didn't care for the water too much as it was very cold but he loved to play in the sand and find weird sea creatures. He also loved chasing me with the seaweed as he knew I hated it.

As he got older he turned into an even greater person. He became a sergeant in the Army. He traveled overseas at times and I had the privilege to get the calls and video chats when he could. The long chats were all over the place from the things he'd seen and done to making new plans once he got back stateside.

The memories never go away they just become stronger and until we meet again nephew know that I'll always keep them alive.
