“ I loved visiting Aunt Marie as a little girl when she lived at Georgetown apartments. I loved her little apartment there -- always neat, stylish and full of character, just like Aunt Marie. There was always a dish of candy, too. I loved the sound of her voice and appreciated her willingness to call it as she saw it. I especially appreciated that she did tell stories; she was the person on my mom's side who told stories. And like all kids, I was a sucker for a good story. Aunt Marie did seem eccentric, mysterious -- even a little exotic. For most of my childhood I recall her living alone and working to support herself, too, so I saw her as a strong, independent woman. All of those things appealed to me. Now I think of Aunt Marie as the aunt who never forgets to send me a little something special she saw somewhere and thought I might like. I have a beautiful ring she bought on QVC that always gets lots of compliments. I love telling people, "My Aunt Marie sent this to me just because." It isn't real, of course, but it looks real. It is flashy but not tacky. And despite the fact that it is about ten years old and gets a lot of wear, it is holding up very well. Yes, there is a lot of life in that ring. I have always liked it, but now I cherish it. I wish so much I could be there tomorrow. Most Sincerely, Whitney Pitts Allgood
